Bantam Press. Reason compels us to admit such a ruler, together with life in such a world, which we must consider as future life, or else all moral laws are to be considered as idle dreams It seems clear to me that human beings were made to reflect someone or something else, to exist for a higher and bigger purpose.

Photobymendhakatflickr. But it isn't just a matter of opinion or taste. I tell you that the British rule is not there because God willed it but for the reason that we lack the will and courage to oppose it. Atheism is also distinguished from agnosticism, which leaves open the question whether there is a god or not, professing to find the questions unanswered or unanswerable. In Edward Craighed. Because it would be unbearable for Russell to admit what he believes. For example, religious and nonreligious people alike can end up following charismatic individuals without questioning .
